the last few years have seen a number of periods when severe weather has led to widespread travel disruption exposing a lack of preparedness across all modes of transport in terms of infrastructure resources and looking after the interests of passengers pro active decision making by rail and aviation operators to reduce or cancel services ahead of a major event has reduced disruption however there is scope for further improvement the highways agency should review the barriers to providing comprehensive realtime information to drivers the office of rail regulation orr should ensure that train operating companies develop more robust procedures to identify how long a period of disruption is likely to last and to communicate this clearly to passengers the civil aviation authority caa should set out how it will evaluate the impact of the new airport licence conditions on passenger welfare by spring 2015 the caa must also ensure that best practice on the provision of information and on passenger welfare is shared across all uk airports the availability of salt for gritting roads has improved with the establishment of the strategic salt reserve more though should be done to keep pavements clear of ice and snow however winter weather is about more than just snow as illustrated by the st jude storm across southern england and the more recent storm stranding thousands at gatwick the transport sector must continue to work closely with the met office and other forecasters finally embedding a culture of continuous review and improvement must remain a priority this book seeks to understand why almost all commentators on the irish economy were unprepared for the scale of the recent economic crisis it analyses the public contributions from a broad range of observers including domestic and international agencies academics the newspapers and politicians this approach gives new insights into the analytical and institutional shortfalls that inhibited observers from recognising the degree of the risk the book demonstrates that most commentators were either impeded in what they could say or else lacked the expertise to challenge the prevailing view the findings have significant implications for a broad range of institutions particularly the media and the oireachtas the irish parliament
